

Concept Question 5-11: Application of the Fourier series method in circuit analysis relies on which fundamental property of the circuit?

The Fourier series solution method relies on the superposition property (the response to a linear combination of inputs [the Fourier series expansion] is the same linear combination of outputs. Superposition is a property of any linear time-invariant (LTI) system, of which circuits are examples.